

BALTIMORE DAY-BOAT SERVICE IS RESTORED

Ericsson Line Steamships Penn and Lord Baltimore Again Plying Through Canal

The Ericsson Line has restored its day-boat service to Baltimore, adding another delightful trip that can be taken in a short time and at comparatively little expense. The launching of its day service to Baltimore several years ago filled a long-felt want for those who wished to travel South by water. During the war this service was discontinued and the Penn and Lord Baltimore, two of the most modern and fastest steamships that ply these waters, were placed in other service.

The trip to Baltimore by water is one of the most delightful and historical that can be had in the East. After leaving Philadelphia, the first stop is Delaware City. En route many of the mighty shipbuilding places, such as New York Shipbuilding, Hog Island and many historic points of interest are passed.

On entering the canal at Delaware City, Fort du Pont is seen on the left, while beautiful Lorewood Grove offers opportunity for a day of recreation. On leaving the canal at Chesapeake City a delightful sail is had down the Elk River on to the broad waters of the mighty Chesapeake.
